PEACE WITH ITS VICTORIES BY EUGENE FIELD

(Copyright, 1895.) CHAPTER II.

So Lucius had to pursue his journey alone. The train was crowded. Lucius finally, however, found seat beside a grim but intellectual-looking passenger in the smoking car. The atmosphere of the car was oppressive. As night came on there was Titanic snoring all around. Lucius tried to raise one of the windows, but the rain of the previous day had swelled it and it stuck fast.

"I wonder," said Lucius to his grim but intellectual-looking fellow-traveler, "I wonder what makes the air so close in this car?"

To this query the other answered, solemnly: "I opine that some gentleman has drawn a boot."

They stopped eight minutes for breakfast next morning. The menu was soda crackers and pepper-sauce. When Lucius was asked to pay 75 cents for this entertainment he expostulated.

"What do you expect for 75 cents?" demanded the callous money-charger at the door; "terrapin soup and lemon pie?"

Lucius returned to the smoking car only to find that during his absence his seat had been taken by a lady with the asthma. For the next 100 miles Lucius stood up, buying things of the train boy every time that enterprising person came along. It was a dreary, weary while, but Lucius was not sorry that he had come. "I shall presently be more than repaid," thought he.

The destination was reached at last. Every city is hot in the middle of an August afternoon. Lucius' paper collar fell off just as he stepped from the train. As he sought to elbow his way through the steaming crowd he could not help thinking how nice and cool it was under the soft maple trees of a certain Iowa home lot he had in mind. For some reason or other his carpet bag seemed to weigh a ton. "I must be all worn out," thought Lucius. "Well, no wonder, for I didn't get a wink's sleep all night."

Lucius tried nine hotels, but couldn't find accommodations. He began to feel nervous and hysterical, because everywhere he went he was conspicuously advised by legends on the walls and buildings to "Beware of Pickpockets." A raging thirst overcame him and he stepped into a convenient place and asked for a drink of water.

"We don't keep it," said the fat proprietor of the place.

"Don't keep it?" echoed Lucius. "No; 'tain't healthy; there's germs in it," said the fat proprietor. "But I can let you have a nice cool beer for five cents."

An expressman agreed to take Lucius to a pleasant boarding house for three dollars, and in climbing into the wagon Lucius split his coat very badly across the shoulders. The boarding house was in the suburbs; the terms were four dollars a day in advance. Lucius was assigned to a cot in the room over the kitchen; the room was neither large nor royally furnished, but it was warm; there were seven other cots in the room, and it was the desire of the proprietor to put two men in each cot. "Are my fellow-lodgers veterans?" asked Lucius.

"No, they are brewery employes," was the answer.

"They have given up their regular rooms temporarily in order to accommodate the visitors."

For supper they had cold bologna sausage in the shell, and dark bread with aromatic pills in it. Then Lucius went for a walk. A brass band was parading the street, discoursing lively music. "I wonder what patriotic air that is," thought Lucius. "I've lived so long upon my Iowa farm that I've quite forgotten the good old songs we soldiers used to sing." He asked a stranger, and was told that the band was playing a selection from "Erminio." Lucius did not know what that meant, and he was too modest to ask.

Poor Lucius! He sought everywhere for a familiar face, but could find none; no familiar voice fell upon his ears; the sights and the sounds of the big, hot city were strange to him. He had hoped to have reminiscences of the glorious old war days revived, but none around him seemed to know that there had ever been a war. The hands played lively music, the cabmen whirled nither and thither, innumerable fakirs plied their trades upon every hand, and everywhere there was a confusion that seemed tumultuous. In it all there was no atom of patriotism or of cordiality; all was business, cold, selfish, sordid business.

An orator was addressing a crowd at a street corner; he wore the honored uniform, but his speech was not the reminiscence talk which Lucius yearned to hear. The orator was a candidate for some local political office; his eloquence burned incense to his ambition.

Lucius fared ill that night. Oh, but it was hot, and drawers will snore! "Didn't I hear dogs howling at night?" asked Lucius next morning.

"Like as not you did," said the landlady. "The dog pound is just back of the house, and I've noticed that at this season of the year the poor creatures are awfully bothered with insomnia."

Going out upon the street Lucius saw a handsomely-dressed man who appeared to be weeping. The man allowed that he was an old soldier from Chicago. He showed Lucius a telegram saying: "Come at once; Mamie is worse." The stranger said that Mamie was his only daughter.

"If she is sick, why don't you go home?" asked Lucius. He pitied the distraught father.

"I have barely time to catch the train as it is, and I have hardly money enough by me in currency to take me through," sobbed the poor fellow. Then he wondered (audibly) whether Lucius would be willing to cash his check for fifty dollars?

"I reckon I'll have to do it," said Lucius, "although it won't leave me much chance to run on till the bank opens." Unhappy, thrice unhappy Lucius! Beguiled by sentimental vanity to leave a pleasant, prosperous home to brave the malignities of the hot and dusty and sinful metropolis, and to fall presently a victim to the arts of the swindler—oh, thrice unhappy Lucius, say we!

But happy Hank Baker! Happy in the possession of that wooden leg, enduring trade mark of our most honorable monument to thy patriotic valor; happier still in the boon of a far-seeing, forceful spouse, who, by the single act of comprehending, ravishing and sequestering that lignous member, hath plucked thee, as if thou hadst been a brand, from the burning!

THE END.

HIG EXPRESS ROBBERY.

Masked Highwaymen Hold Up an Agent and Secure Twenty Thousand Dollars at a Santa Fe Depot.

COLORADO SPRINGS, COL., Nov. 12.—The Wells Fargo Express Company has given out the following official statement regarding the robbery at the Santa Fe depot about 10 o'clock last night:

"Twenty thousand dollars was sent from Denver to the First National Bank of Colorado Springs early in the afternoon. This money was in currency of small denominations, and was received about 4 o'clock and too late to be delivered to the bank. The package containing the money was placed in the depot safe and both doors locked. There was nothing to indicate its value. Evidently the thieves knew of its existence. When train No. 6 came in at 9:45, there were other packages aboard with the currency to the amount of $35,000 consigned to the same bank. These packages were delivered to the agent and placed in the safe with the other. After the train had departed the agent, George Krout, went to the platform to straighten the trucks, which were standing there, and when he returned to the office he was met at the door by two masked men with drawn revolvers. The package containing the $20,000 was demanded, and the agent was compelled to open the safe and give it up. The agent said nothing about the remaining packages, and the robbers left at once. The standing rewards of $300 each for information or arrest of the robbers of course holds good, and the amount will undoubtedly be increased."

When Krout entered his office after performing his duties outside, two men, one tall, the other short, confronted him with revolvers pointed at his head and commanded him to throw up his hands. Krout obeyed. Then one of the robbers, stepping close to the agent said: "Not a word from you. We want you to open that safe and be quick about it. Hurry up."

Krout denied that there was any money in the safe. The revolver was pressed close to him, and he was told to open the safe or suffer the consequences. With trembling hands he slowly turned the combination. When the door swung open Krout explained that there was only one package there, and reaching in he picked up an envelope containing $20,000 which he handed to the short man. He then closed the heavy door.

The robbers, seeming satisfied that the agent told the truth, stepped away from the safe. Krout's action in handing out the $20,000 package and closing the doors of the safe saved the company $35,000.

During all this time the thieves did not appear in the least excited. They then ordered Krout to undress himself and get into bed. After he had done so one of the robbers took pains to see that the quilts and comforters were drawn tightly over Krout's head and tucked down. Then Krout heard one of them say: "Now open the door and see if there is anyone about."

Krout heard the door slide back and bump, and then one of the robbers said: "Wait, now, we have missed something. Let us take a good, long look over the place and see."

When Krout plucked up courage to jump out of bed and go outside, there was no one in sight.

Treasury Cash.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12.—To-day's statement of the condition of the treasury shows: Available cash balance, $178,415,648; gold reserve, $92,918,470.

BEFORE I could get relief from a most horrible blood disease I had spent hundreds of dollars trying various remedies and physicians, none of which did me any good. My finger nails came off and my hair came out, leaving me perfectly bald. I then went to

HOT SPRINGS

Hoping to be cured by this celebrated treatment, but very soon became disgusted and decided to try S.S.S. The effect was truly wonderful. I commenced to recover at once, and after I had taken twelve bottles I was entirely cured—cured by S.S.S. when the world-renowned Hot Springs had failed.

Nervous Prostration

Cured by Dr. Miles' Nervine.

Prolonged derangement of the nervous system not only affects the brain and mental powers, but develops disease in some of the vital organs. The most dangerous of these indirect results is when the heart is affected. This was the case of the Rev. N. F. Surface, Fawn River, Mich., who writes under date of Feb. 14, 1895:

"Fourteen years ago I had a slight stroke of paralysis. Overwork brought on nervous prostration. I was exceedingly nervous and the exertion of public speaking caused heart palpitation that threatened my life. I used two bottles of Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure for my heart trouble, and two of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine for my nervousness and feel better than I ever expected to feel again. I can speak for hours without tiring or having my heart flutter as it formerly did, and I have you to thank that I am alive today."

ESCAPES THE GALLOWS.

A Mob Sets Him Free, the Noted Mississippi Murderer, at Liberty.

PURVIS, Miss., Oct. 11.—The jail here was broken open at 12:25 a. m. by a mob and Will Purvis, the alleged murderer and whitecapper, was liberated.

The crowd gathered silently but quickly around the jail at midnight, overpowered the guards and a little while later broke into the prison. Purvis was set at liberty and he lost no time in speeding away. Though many persons in this section believe that Purvis should have gone to the gallows, there is a feeling of relief over his escape.

Purvis was one of the whitecaps who committed so many outrages some years ago and was tried for the murder of one of the men connected with the overthrow of whitecapping. He was found guilty and sentenced to be hung. Upon the day fixed for his execution, the rope was placed around his neck and the trap sprung, but he slipped through to the ground. The people believed it a miracle and would not let the sheriff proceed with the hanging. The case was taken to the supreme court and that body affirmed the verdict of the jury. He was condemned to be hanged on December 12.

Salisbury's singular omission.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12.—Lord Salisbury's failure to mention the Venezuelan question in his Guild hall speech is regarded as a most significant omission. The speech summed up the premier's position on all the foreign questions regarded as of pressing importance, so that this avoidance of all mention of Venezuela is construed to mean that the premier attaches less importance to it and to the controversy over the Monroe doctrine than has been supposed.
